Jack Bannister, returning to the South American home inherited from his Spanish mother, brings a big bunch of Wyoming Cowboys with him. At a fiesta he meets an old pal, Menocal, only to lose his old friend a few minutes later through his murder by Bud Latham an American bad man who is protected by the rascally Berengo.

Pursuing Latham the next day, Jack finds him trailing Jose Remado, an outlaw, and his pretty daughter, Ynez. Latham appears in the canyon and Jack is help up as a suspicious character by Ynez. He braves her revolver long enough to kiss her and then meets Latham and administers a sound thrashing to him. But it turns out that Latham has stolen from Ynez' father a paper establishing the title to his freedom - in default of which Ynez' father is next day jailed by the scoundrelly Berengo.

Jack, disguised as a peon, slips into Berengo's office, knocks him out and frees Ynez' father. But Latham and his gang soon descend on the Remado home and steal Ynez. Hearing of the outrage, Jack and his cowboys hasten to the rescue, fighting a great revolver battle with the desperados.

Seeing that Latham is carrying Ynez away on his horse, Jack pursues and follows him to the cave in the canyon in which Latham has carried Ynez. Singlehanded Jack enters the cave and soon re-appears with the rescued girl.

It ends with a love scene.
